I borrowed this from my local library. It is an anthology of research and narratives on homelessness often giving both points of views on different issues dealing with the complexity of homelessness. I question why it was cataloged as "Children" and put in the children's non-fiction section of my library not because of the subject matter but because of the difficulty of the text. I could see it in "YA" (Young Adult) perhaps but not "Children." The research articles were technical works and the vocabulary (with no glossary) was often sophisticated (e.g. "recidivism").
